Three-Week Tour of Mexico is Scheduled

PRESIDENT ARNOLD KILPATRICK, right, and librarian Donald MacKenzie study plans for the new $3 million library building which is taking shape on the Northwestern campus. Steelwork in the background shows the massiveness of the three-story building, which will have 100,000 square feet of floor area.

Nork is Progressing

Work is progressing at Northwestern on a $3 million library, which will be one of the most modern university library facilities in the South.

Steelwork began to take shape early this month and gives an indication of the massiveness of the building, which is being constructed at a cost of $3 million.

Contractor for the library building is the McInnis Company of Minden. Architects for the three-story structure, which will have 100,000 square feet of floor area, are De-Keyser, Ponthie and Boutte of Alexandria and L. Jaco LeBlanc way for the library. of Lafayette.

a three-story facility, the structure is being planned to allow for the addition of two more floors should expansion become necessary in the future.

The library will be equipped with elevators and will be completely carpeted and air-conditioned.

Construction of the library is taking place on a tract of land bordering on Highway 6 on the northwest edge of the campus. Three frame buildings which served in recent years as fraternity houses were demolished to make

Among special features of the

Although present plans call for new library will be private carrels for graduate students, a serials reading area, reference and bibliography room, seminar rooms and faculty and staff offices. A media center in the library will include microfilm, phono-records, tapes and other audio-visual equipment.

Librarian Donald MacKenzie said the new facility will hold a minimum of 350,000 volumes, which will nearly double the present library capacity. There will be space in the new library for 1,000 people at once.

There will be a reference room on the ground floor and reading rooms and reserve reading rooms in the two upper floors.

College Credit May Be Earned

Tour Bureau officials at Northwestern have announced that applications are coming in rapidly but vacancies are still available for the university's first annual three-week Summer Tour Mexico.

Charles W. Porter, assistant pro-fessor of history at NSU and tour director, said persons interested in the Mexico tour should apply as soon as possible, because only 34 persons will be selected to participate in the tour.

Sponsored by the Northwestern Division of Continuing Education and the Department of History, the bus tour leaves Natchitoches July 31 and returns on Aug. 22. Tour participants may earn three hours of graduate or undergraduate credit in history.

Porter has traveled extensively in Mexico and will teach a course in Mexican history during the regular summer session which precedes the tour dates. Tour participants may take the course but are not required to.

The 22-day itinerary includes points of historical, artistic and architectural importance and pre-Columbian archaeological sites. Traveling by chartered bus, the tourists will cross the border at Brownsville, Tex., and will tour several cities of interest, including Monterrey, Saltillo, San Luis Potosi, Guanajuato and Mexico City.

From the capital city, the members of the group continue to Puebla, the Pyramids of Teetihuacan, Oaxaca, the Maya cities and pyramids in the Yucatan periodia. On the way back worth, scheduled at Veracras, toria and San Antonio, Patras.

Porter said that in addition to the organized tours, several free days have been included in the program, allowing participents time to shop or take part in individual tours.

Persons interested in the three week summer tour of Mexico may write the Tour Bureau, Northwestern State University.

Library Prints Aswell Catalog

A catalog of the private library of the late James Aswell has been published by Russell Library at Northwestern.

Entitled "A Writer's Library," the catalog was prepared by Katherine Bridges, Louisiana Collection Librarian and Archivist at Northwestern.

The booklet lists the books, magazines, scrapbooks, letters, tapes and motion picture films which were included in the personal library of the widely-known North Louisiana writer.

Northwestern's library was awarded the writer's library in 1963 under the provisions of the will of Aswell's widow, the late Rosalind Hightower Aswell.

Aswell was the only child of James B. Aswell, who was president of both Northwestern and Louisiana Tech and was also State Superintendent of Education and for many years a Representative in the U.S. Congress.

The younger Aswell was a prolific writer from the early 1920's until his death in 1955. His short stories appeared regularly in such magazines as the "American Magazine," "Saturday Evening Post," "Liberty," "Colliers," and "Mademoiselle."

Aswell was also the author of three novels—"The Midsummer

Entering the final week of April, coach Don Beasley's golf squad ranked fourth in the Gulf States Couference and had a competitor, sophomore George Risty, tied for individual medal honors.

Coach Johnnie Emmons' tennis team sported an 8-3 overall record at the same date and also held fourth place in the GSC with a 6-3 mark.

Senior Jim Genovese, playing No. 3. showed a 12-2 singles record, and should be a factor in the GSC Conference Meet.

Starting the last week of April, the baseball team possessed a 15-17 overall record and a 9-11 league mark. This also had coach Herbie Smith's team ranked fourth in the GSC round-robin race. Pitcher Woody Shick had already authored three no-hitters, a school record.

Northwestern's track team was also making progress. By late-April Coach Glenn Gossett's squad had bettered 10 of 17 bests recorded by the 1970 squad, and new school records had been set in the triple jump and 440-yard intermediate hurdles by Farrell Solieau and Blaine Vedros.

The Demon trackmen had out-scored defending GSC champion Northeast in one triangular meet.

In 1970, Northwestern's golf, baseball and track teams finished last in the league, while the tennis squad ended next to last.
